Inside the Ring Charley White.

However, the fight was declared a raw. It has always been my opinion hat Erne should have been declared the confident to his friends that he would wither win a metal for waitzing than hold the lightweight championship.

Lavigne was possessed by the idea hat he would make a great weight, and he continually challenged forming Ryan, holder of that title.

HOW YOU CAN GAIN

America's Foremost Referee Tells How Jack M' Auliffe Boxed Kid Lavigne Four Rounds in This City and Then Retired, Announc-

A feated the great Walcott, he re-ceived and accepted a challenge from his old friend Tommy Ryan. They fought a four-round draw here in New Lavigne next fought Tommy Tracy,

It's an odd thing, but every pupil Ryan ever brought to the front always found a time when he wanted to meet his teacher. There was Kid McCoy, He tearned all that Tommy could teach him. and like Lavigne, the time came when McCoy faced the great Ryan in the ring.

Lavigne new became very anxious to take the lightweigh title, and he chailenged Jack McAuliffe, who was rapidly losing interest in the fighting game. In fact Mac had almost entirely given up his training, and was giving all of his time to betting on the ponies.

McAuliffe was about ready to retire from the game, and as he considered that Lavigne had shown enough class to take care of the title that he had so faithfully guarded for years, Jack agreed to give the "Rid" a chance at

They met in a four-round bout at Stadison Square Garden on March II, 1898. Jim Kennedy was manager of the show. McAuliffe and Lavigne boxed the full four rounds and at the end of the show McAuliffe announced that he was turning over the championship to Kid Lavigne and that he was retiring as undefeated champion lightweight of the brother Billy. Smith in four teen rounds, his brother Billy, who was seconding him on that occasion, climbed into the ring world.

"I think that Lavigne is the best man to hold the title and I wish him luck as my successor," said Jack.

Lavigne Went Abroad.

Dr. Ordway, a famous sport of that period, believed that Lavigne was the world, and he immediately got in communication with the managers of the National Sporting Club of London, Over there they had a lightweight in the person of Dick Burge who was promised a match with the great English fighter. Fitippatrick and Lavigne sailed for the other side.

When they arrived in London town Lavigne was taken around to the club's headquarters. Remember, he was still young, round-faced and entirely boylish in appearance.

"This is a bloomin' kiddle you've.

brought over here to bawx our champion, said the club matager to First patrick. 'Why, my dear fellow, this chas cawn't think of goln' on with our man.'

But the docter was sure of his knowledge of the boxing art than did lavigne. Jack was a straight man, and he offered to bet a thousand in which think of goln' on with our man.'

But the docter was sure of his knowledge of the boxing art than did lavigne. Jack was a swinger, which man would deliver a knowledge of the boxing art than did lavigne. Jack was a straight man in the docter was sure of his ground, and he offered to bet a thousand hours his man would deliver a knowledge of the full-like rushes of a slugger like Lavigne. In conly one thing did the 'Kid' excel, and that wend had a here physical the 'Kid' excel, and that was in stamina; but spains this like taking money away from irresponsive persons to him, but he was not the kind that would pass up the chance to take money from suckers, and so the bout was on.

Sam Fitzpatrick, in the capacity of manager, when informed that the British lightwoight champton weighed fully 10 pounds, said the "Kid' didn't give a darn-or words to that effect. 'Really, you know, we don't care if your bloomin chanp, weighs a tom,' said Sam to Burgo's backers.

They fought in the National Sporting Club on the night of June 1, 1906, Lavigne hooking out the Briton in the seventeenth round.
